Dear Josh & Marguerite,

As you may gather from the Sartonian chronological data faithfully recorded above, I am back to at least part — & ~~at~~ the often best part — of my daily routine. And I slept well. That is owing to a large extent to your much appreciated telephone calls. As the most rational man I know has often done for me during the past 15 years or so, so Josh has done again. Nothing could be more remote from mere Joshing than the typically Joshian remark that the most painful phase of my submitting to an angiogram will probably be the waiting until the actual procedure.

And Marguerite's knowing and gentle observations on my reported state of mind (and psyche?) have made the waiting much less painful.

With much love to you both,

/BG
