Dear Dr. Lederberg,

We read your article in our local newspaper, concerning small pox. Being you are an atharity on this we would like your opinion of what happend to our daughter Nancy who is 14 years now. We have been concerned about this. When Nancy was 9 months old she had a small Pox vaccination, on the same day she became very sick and was put in the hospital. We were told she had cow Pox. Several doctors have told us she should never have the vaccination the rest of her life.

When Nancy started school we use to put a sign on her please no small Pox vaccination we were that worried. They said it could kill her. Though many years have passed things do change. What happens if she is exposed or travels to another country? We would appreciate a prompt attention and reply. This means very much to us. Thank you

Very truly yours.
